3 YEAR EVERGREEN TRANSPLANTS

FALL PLANTING

Fall planting is very successful, especially if a few simple rules are followed. Plant as early as possible, and if hot dry weather follows planting, water thoroughly. Fall planted stock should be put to bed for the winter with "wet feet". As an added protection, if you have the material available, mulch lightly after the ground freezes. Trees and plants planted in the fall have the benefit of the cooler, usually more moist weather during which to become established. Furthermore, fall planted stock always makes more growth the first year than does spring planted stock. In other words it gets a much better and earlier start in the spring. Then, too, the job is out of the way and not delayed too long, as it might be during the mad spring rush. Try it.
